Journal Theme

The Bahria University Journal of Information & Communication Technology (BUJICT) (ISSN: 1999-4974) is an annual journal that publishes articles which contribute new results in all areas of the information and communication technologies. BUJICT is an international journal intended for professionals and researchers of computer science and engineering, communication, and information technology. The journal also aims to publish new attempts in the form of special issues on emerging areas in information and communication technologies. The journal welcomes publications of high quality papers on theoretical developments and practical applications in all fields of ICT. Original research papers, state-of-the-art reviews, high quality technical notes, and brief communication / letters are invited for publication.

Submissions of quality papers in the following non-exhaustive list of topics are invited:

- Communication Systems & Techniques
- Digital Signal Processing
- Biometrics and Information Security
- Embedded Systems
- Nano Technology
- Genetic Engineering and Algorithms
- Control, Automation and Fuzzy Logic
- Data Mining & Warehousing
- Computer Networks
- Bioinformatics & Computational Biology
- Information Theory and Coding
- Image Processing & Recognition
- Algorithms, Tools & Applications
- Software Engineering
- RF Circuit Design
- Satellite Engineering and Technology
- Distributed and Grid Computing
- Artificial Intelligence and Robotics
- Computer Graphics
- Wireless, Sensor, and Ad hoc Networks

Paper Submission

We encourage submission of the original high quality papers (maximum 10 pages in specified format) with contributions not published or not currently submitted for consideration to another journal or conference demonstrating the current research areas of ICT. All papers will be refereed according to the standard review process. It is anticipated that the issue will contain between eight to ten papers, although this can be adjusted depending upon the number and quality of papers.
